1 I. INTRODUCTION AND INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

2 The Amici States<sup>1</sup> are home to hundreds of thousands of people from El Salvador, Haiti, 3 Nicaragua, and Sudan who hold Temporary Protected Status (“TPS”)—a legal status provided to 4 foreign nationals who are present in the United States when their countries of origin become 5 unsafe and cannot handle their return. TPS holders are nurses, roofers, pastors, chefs, bus drivers, 6 teachers, landscapers, and child care providers. They are homeowners, business owners, union
7 members, class presidents, and civic leaders. They are our neighbors, co-workers, family 8 members, and friends.

9 The Department of Homeland Security’s (“DHS”) termination of TPS for El Salvador, 10 Haiti, Nicaragua, and Sudan would strip these community members of legal authorization to work 11 and could result in their deportation to countries that are unsafe and unprepared to receive them.
12 Many TPS holders would presumably be deported or otherwise have no choice but to leave;
13 others would go into the shadows; all would lose the right to remain legally in the United States 14 and support themselves and their families under the terms of TPS. The result would be harm to 15 the welfare of TPS holders and their families, shuttered businesses, labor shortages, empty church 16 pews, and greater strain on public and private social services.

17 Already, TPS terminations are hurting our economy and civil society, as the prospect of 18 widespread deportation has left whole communities uncertain, confused, and afraid. But these 19 terminations will inflict even greater damage in the months ahead if they are not enjoined, 20 including considerable harm to a range of Amici States’ interests. The public interest, as seen 21 through the lens of these harms to Amici States discussed below, weighs strongly in favor of the 22 preliminary injunction sought by plaintiffs; accordingly, Amici States have a profound interest in 23 this matter.

25
26 <sup>1</sup> The States are California, the District of Columbia, Massachusetts, Connecticut, 27 Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, New Jersey, New Mexico, New 28 York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington. The District of Columbia is included as an “Amici State” for the purposes of this brief.

1 II. THE PUBLIC INTEREST FAVORS A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION BECAUSE 2 DHS’S POLICY WILL INFLICT SERIOUS AND IRREPARABLE HARM ON 3 INDIVIDUALS, FAMILIES, COMMUNITIES, AND THE AMICI STATES.

4 The public interest strongly favors plaintiffs as evidenced, in part, by the significant harm
 5 that Amici States will suffer without the preliminary relief that plaintiffs seek.<sup>2</sup> DHS’s decisions
 6 are already inflicting broad and systemic harm on the public. The overwhelming majority of TPS
 7 holders have lived here for many years—in some instances, decades. For example, on average, 8 Salvadoran recipients have lived in the United States for 21 years and Haitian recipients for 13
 9 years.<sup>3</sup> These individuals have built lives in the United States. They have started families, 10 founded businesses, bought homes, joined churches, received degrees, and advanced in their 11 careers. They contribute to our economy and civic life in countless ways, both quantifiable and 12 intangible. Granting the injunction that plaintiffs seek could prevent needless harm not only to 13 TPS holders, but to those who rely on them for care, friendship, family and community cohesion, 14 and economic vitality.

15 On the other side of the ledger, the federal government can assert little to no legally 16 cognizable harm from entry of the injunction. As the Ninth Circuit has held, “the government[] . .
 17 . cannot suffer harm from an injunction that merely ends an unlawful practice or reads a statute as 18 required to avoid constitutional concerns.” Rodriguez v. Robbins, 715 F.3d 1127, 1145 (9th Cir.
 19 2013) (citing Zepeda v. I.N.S., 753 F.2d 719, 727 (9th Cir. 1983)).<sup>4</sup> The only conceivable harm to

20 <sup>2</sup> In cases like this one, which affects many non-parties (including Amici States), courts 21 consider the hardship to third parties as part of the public interest analysis even when the 22 government is a party. See Golden Gate Rest. Ass’n v. City & Cty. of S.F., 512 F.3d 1112, 1126–
 23 27 (9th Cir. 2008); see also Ms. L. v. U.S. Immigration & Customs Enf’t, 310 F. Supp. 3d 1133, 1148 (S.D. Cal. 2018) (considering public interest in case involving separation of minor 24 immigrant children from their parents) (citing Hernandez v. Sessions, 872 F.3d 976, 996 (9th Cir.
 25 2017)).

26 <sup>3</sup> Nicole Prchal Svajlenka et al., TPS Members Are Integral Members of the U.S. Economy
 27 and Society, Ctr. Am. Progress (Oct. 20, 2017), <https://tinyurl.com/TPSCAP>. TPS holders from 28 El Salvador and Haiti represent 75 percent of the total TPS population.

 2018) (finding lack of injury to federal government from order “simply correct[ing] the improper exercise of [DHS] authority” in case relating to rescission of Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals [“DACA”]).

1 the federal government here would be some period of delay in effectuating the TPS terminations 2 if its actions are ultimately found to have been legal, a “harm” of vanishing significance when 3 juxtaposed with the harms that will befall plaintiffs, Amici States, and others if TPS is terminated
 4 for the countries at issue. TPS recipients have been vetted extensively and, in many instances, 5 repeatedly,<sup>5</sup> and their individual status is subject to withdrawal if they lose eligibility by, for 6 example, being convicted of a felony.<sup>6</sup> Clearly, this group cannot be said to present a public 7 safety or national security threat such that immediate termination of their status is required even if 8 defendants’ actions were legal.<sup>7</sup> Thus, as discussed by plaintiffs, the balance of equities tips in 9 favor of an injunction here. Pls.’ Mot. for Prelim. Inj. 31–33.

10 Courts have repeatedly taken the kinds of public harms asserted by Amici States here into 11 account when assessing whether issuing a preliminary injunction is appropriate. These have 12 included harms to family members, Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996 (citing “indirect hardship to 13 [plaintiffs’] friends and family members,” including harm to children who “had to receive 14 counseling because of the trauma of their government-compelled separation from their father”)
 15 (citing Golden Gate Rest. Ass’n, 512 F.3d at 1126), Doe v. Trump, 288 F. Supp. 3d 1045, 1084 16 (W.D. Wash. 2017) (citing “public interest in uniting families”) (citation omitted);<sup>8</sup> economic

1 felt by Amici States and their residents if the TPS terminations at issue are not enjoined.

2 A. Families Will Be Torn Apart.

3 Having lived and worked legally in the United States for years, many TPS holders have 4 gotten married, had children, and raised families in the Amici States. In fact, hundreds of 5 thousands of children—each of whom is a U.S. citizen by birth—have been born to TPS holders
6 in the United States.<sup>13</sup> As a result, hundreds of thousands of people live in “mixed-status” 7 households, where one or both parents hold TPS, while some or all of their children (and, 8 sometimes, a spouse) are U.S. citizens.

9 Terminating TPS guarantees that these “mixed-status” families will—at the very least—10 face agonizing choices. With the loss of TPS, a parent will face the unacceptable options of (1) 11 returning to her country of origin alone, leaving her children behind; (2) taking her U.S. citizen 12 children with her to a dangerous country that the children do not know, and where the safety of 13 the TPS holder and her children cannot be ensured; or (3) staying in the United States and 14 retreating into the shadows, knowing she cannot work legally and could be deported at any time.
15 These are choices no parent should have to face, yet DHS is forcing hundreds of thousands of 16 families to make these decisions through its new policy.

17 In fact, the prospect of confronting these choices is already harming children. Due to fears 18 about family members’ deportation, children across the country are experiencing serious mental

27 <sup>13</sup> TPS holders from El Salvador and Haiti have almost 220,000 United States citizen 28 children, over 50,000 of whom live in California. Ten percent of Salvadoran and nine percent of Haitian TPS holders are married to a legal U.S. resident. Robert Warren & Donald Kerwin, *A

1 health problems, including depression, anxiety, self-harm, and regression.<sup>14</sup> Studies show that 2 children’s concerns about their parents’ immigration status can impair their socioemotional and 3 cognitive development.<sup>15</sup> And perhaps unsurprisingly, children whose immigrant mothers are 4 subject to deportation have higher incidence of adjustment and anxiety disorders.<sup>16</sup>

5 Of course, these harms are worsened when fears of forcible separation come true. In one 6 study, children with deported parents refused to eat, pulled out their hair, had persistent stomach-7 aches and headaches, engaged in substance abuse, lost interest in daily activities, and had trouble
8 maintaining positive relationships with non-deported parents.<sup>17</sup> These traumatic childhood 9 experiences can also inflict lasting harm, including severe impairments of a child’s self-worth and 10 ability to form close relationships later in life, increased anxiety, and depression.<sup>18</sup>

11 In addition to threatening children’s health, deporting a family’s financial breadwinner 12 can lead to economic hardship and loss of housing for remaining family members, and can put the 13 care of children, seniors, and disabled family members at serious risk.<sup>19</sup> As a result, many 14 families will be forced to seek increased social services, stretching the limited resources of the 15 Amici States. For example, as of 2011, more than 5,000 children nationally were estimated to be

1 living in foster care due to their parents' detention or deportation.<sup>20</sup> With long-term foster care 2 estimated to cost about $25,000 per child per year,<sup>21</sup> these immigration enforcement actions cost
 3 states and local governments $125 billion dollars annually.<sup>22</sup> That burden could substantially 4 increase if TPS holders lose status and are forced to separate from their families.

5 All of these harms are exacerbated by the fact that—despite DHS's determination to the 6 contrary—returning TPS holders to their countries of origin would “pose a serious threat to their 7 personal safety.”<sup>23</sup> As recently as last year, the United States itself warned that that the affected 8 countries do not have the ability to ensure that large numbers of TPS beneficiaries and their U.S.
 9 citizen children can safely return. Specifically, the State Department concluded that:<sup>24</sup>

- 10 • “Haiti continues to lack the capacity to ensure that the large population [of] TPS 11 beneficiaries currently residing in the United States can return in safety.”
- 12 • “El Salvador. . . continue[s] to have [one] of the world's highest homicide rates, and 13 weak law enforcement capabilities and inadequate government services will make it 14 difficult for [its] government[] to ensure the protection of returning citizens—no less

- 16 • “El Salvador remains unable, due to ongoing security and economic conditions, to 17 handle adequately the precipitous return of its nationals . . . including a significant 18 amount of children, most of whom are dual U.S.-Salvadoran nationals . . . Parents in

3 In addition, the State Department has issued a “Level 3: Reconsider Travel” advisory for 4 Sudan, citing, inter alia, civil unrest and terrorism.<sup>25</sup> Indeed, some areas of Sudan (including 5 Darfur) are under a “Level 4: Do Not Travel” advisory, where “violent crime, such as kidnapping, 6 armed robbery, home invasion, and carjacking, is particularly prevalent.” The State Department 7 will not allow family members under 21 years of age (still less young children) to accompany 8 U.S. government employees to Sudan.

9 Nicaragua is also under a Level 3 advisory, due to, inter alia, crime and civil unrest.<sup>26</sup>
10 Conditions are so severe that on July 6, 2018, the U.S. government ordered non-emergency 11 personnel to leave the county. According to the State Department, “government-controlled 12 parapolice forces” engage in “kidnapping and detaining individuals, taking over privately owned 13 land, and committing other crimes . . . . Government authorities detain protesters, and some 14 people have disappeared. Human rights groups have documented credible claims of torture of 15 detainees . . . . Violent crime, such as sexual assault and armed robbery, is common and has 16 increased as security forces focus on the civil unrest.”

17 Although defendants claim to have received and reviewed input from “other appropriate 18 U.S. Government agencies” in the course of their decisions to terminate TPS,<sup>27</sup> they seem to have 19 ignored not only these warnings from State Department experts, but the in-depth, fact-specific 20 research of USCIS professionals as well. In fact, as set forth in detail by plaintiffs, 21 communications among decisionmakers and staff in the Administration show a radical departure 22 from the normal process, with political appointees repeatedly overriding career expert staff who 23 had concluded that the TPS countries were, in fact, far too dangerous for people to safely return.

 2 faced by TPS holders are, literally, matters of life and death, despite the Administration's efforts 3 to whitewash these conditions to justify its actions.

4 B. Amici States' Economies and Workforces Will Suffer.

5 State economies will also suffer if the TPS terminations are upheld. The labor force 6 participation rate for TPS holders from El Salvador is 88 percent, and for TPS holders from Haiti
 7 81 percent, significantly higher than the overall national rate (63 percent).<sup>28</sup> Over ten years, loss
 8 of legal status for these TPS holders is projected to cost $132.6 billion in GDP (due to lost 9 earnings as well as decreased industry outputs),<sup>29</sup> $5.2 billion in Social Security and Medicare 10 contributions,<sup>30</sup> and $733 million in employers' turnover costs.<sup>31</sup>

11 This impact will be felt most acutely in fields where TPS holders are concentrated, 12 including construction, hospitality, food service, landscaping, child care, and retail.<sup>32</sup> These jobs 13 may prove difficult to fill, leading to a lack of needed services and economic strain. For example, 14 an estimated 37,000-70,000 construction workers are TPS holders.<sup>33</sup> In the Los Angeles and 15 District of Columbia metropolitan areas, almost one in five TPS holders (16,000 individuals)
 16 works in construction.<sup>34</sup> More broadly, almost 16 percent of employed African-born immigrants
 17 (including Sudanese immigrants) work in construction,<sup>35</sup> as do 17,000 Nicaraguan immigrants.<sup>36</sup>

1 Construction companies in the District of Columbia area estimate that termination of TPS will 2 cause them to lose 20 percent of their skilled workforce.<sup>37</sup> The loss of these workers would hurt
 3 the construction industry, which is already “having trouble hiring workers.”<sup>38</sup> Among other 4 things, this labor shortage jeopardizes the Amici States’ ability to prepare for natural disasters,<sup>39</sup>
 5 as well as rebuild after them (for example, the recent California wildfires).<sup>40</sup>

6 The Amici States will also suffer by losing TPS holders as homeowners. Thirty-two 7 percent of TPS holders from El Salvador and Haiti have mortgages,<sup>41</sup> and almost 42 percent of 8 Nicaraguan immigrants are homeowners,<sup>42</sup> an important measure of their economic contribution 9 to the Amici States. Salvadoran TPS homeowners pay an estimated $100 million in property taxes 10 annually, including up to $32 million in the Los Angeles area alone.<sup>43</sup> These homeowners’ loss of 11 status could lead to job loss or deportation, which would in turn result in more foreclosures.<sup>44</sup> In 12 turn, foreclosures cause hardship for families and require more local resources to be spent to 13 address the effects of foreclosure, including declining property values, abandoned homes, crime 14 and social disorder.<sup>45</sup>

15
 16 C. Vulnerable Residents Will Suffer from Disruptions in Care Provided by TPS Holders.

1 percent of female TPS holders work in child care,<sup>46</sup> including 6,100 TPS holders from El 2 Salvador and Haiti alone.<sup>47</sup> Children rely on these providers for care and education, and parents 3 require these services to maintain their own employment. Losing child care workers will be 4 disruptive for the children and families they serve and for the economy, especially given how 5 difficult it is for parents to find affordable, trustworthy, and convenient child care.<sup>48</sup>

6 TPS terminations will also hurt seniors and people with disabilities. Studies show that 7 77,400 direct care workers across the country are immigrants from Haiti and El Salvador.<sup>49</sup> In 8 Massachusetts alone, nursing facilities employ about 4,300 Haitians.<sup>50</sup> If TPS holders can no 9 longer legally work in these jobs, vulnerable residents will lose the services of health care 10 workers with whom they have established trusting relationships. This loss of care could cause a 11 serious deterioration in their physical and mental health. Moreover, it may prove difficult for 12 employers to fill the positions TPS holders are forced to leave. Workers in direct care fields 13 generally receive low wages and no or minimal benefits, and the work is physically and 14 emotionally demanding. As a result, turnover in the industry is high. In Massachusetts, one in 15 seven certified nursing assistant positions is vacant, leaving a shortage of 3,000 workers.<sup>51</sup>
16 Making matters worse, the demand for direct care assistance is increasing with a growing elderly 17 population.<sup>52</sup> If home care positions go unfilled, patients who would otherwise be able to stay in 3 D. Public Health Will Suffer.

4 The TPS terminations will also harm public health and strain state resources. When TPS 5 holders lose work authorization, many will lose employer-sponsored health insurance for 6 themselves and their families, hindering their access to health care.<sup>54</sup> For example, studies show 7 that children of undocumented immigrants are often sicker when seeking emergency room care 8 and frequently miss their preventive annual exams.<sup>55</sup> In the same vein, undocumented women are 9 less likely to receive needed healthcare and preventive screenings than the general U.S.
10 population; this leads to significantly higher rates of adverse conditions, including cervical cancer 11 and birth complications, neonatal morbidity, respiratory distress syndrome, and seizures for 12 newborns.<sup>56</sup> All these individual health problems add up, creating public health consequences that 13 could have been prevented if these patients had had better access to preventive and routine care.
14 Less employer-sponsored health insurance increases Amici States' costs to provide care to 15 uninsured residents—including emergency health insurance, payments to hospitals and 16 community health centers, and funding for public health programs that serve underinsured 17 patients.<sup>57</sup>

4 ensuring that police and prosecutors are able to do their jobs to protect public safety. Terminating 5 TPS will make that job harder because former TPS holders and their families will be less likely to 6 report crime, even if they are victims, after they lose legal status.<sup>58</sup> When law enforcement is 7 unable to obtain evidence of crimes, public safety suffers, and the Amici States will have more 8 difficulty enforcing their criminal codes, a core aspect of state sovereignty. See, e.g., Alfred L.
